

Imagine a place in the heart of the city that offers a retreat from the roller coaster of modern urban life.

Supported by

Imagine a place with its own very special character, energy and style just a few minutes walk from all of the city's amenities. A place that links old with new, museum with cathedral, one city with another and three communities as one. A green place, an inner sanctum for its users. A place to live, to work, to visit, to stay or simply to sit and dream...

Imagine a park that provides all of that!
That place is Irwell City Park.

One of only 23 national projects shortlisted by the Big Lottery Fund Living Landmarks, Irwell City Park is a £45m vision to create a new and exciting urban park running along the natural course of the Irwell, through Salford, Manchester and Trafford.

Led by Salford and Manchester City Councils, Central Salford Urban Regeneration Company and Trafford Metropolitan Borough Council, Irwell City Park will provide exciting waterside public spaces for people to enjoy, a well-lit, safe and welcoming environment, and new leisure and recreation opportunities against a scenic backdrop of stunning architecture that will put the river back at the heart of the community.
